DEMAND FOR REFORM

PEOPLE OF OMAHA WANT BET-TER MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.

Address Signed by 1,000 Citizens That Calls for a Vigorous Nonpartisan Movement Against Rings.

OMAHA, Neb., June 28 .- The demand for municipal reform in Omaha became so pronounced to-day that the business men and citizens, regardless of party feelings, united in the publication of a proclamation calling for the organization of a movement looking to the introduction of business methods in the city government. The embers of public indignation have been fanned for several months by the alleged corruption now existing in local municipal affairs. Months ago it was noticed that city money was being used by speculators, contractors and others with political influence. The matter became so flagrant two weeks ago that the School Board demanded an investigation of its funds. The next day City Treasurer Bolin fled from the city, leaving a note that he was going to commit suicide. Officials located him in hiding. Developments showed that many members of the City Council and other politicians owed the city from $100 to $2,000 each. The only security the treasurer had was a slip in the cash drawer indicating the amount due the city on the I. O. U.
The cash was missing to the amount of

MURDERED EIGHT MEN.

"Bad" Tom Smith Executed in Kentucky After Confessing.

L'EXINGTON, Ky., June 28 .- "Bad" Tom Smith, a member of the French faction in mountain warfare, and the murderer of eight men, was hanged at Jackson, this afternoon. He was baptized in the Kentucky river at 8 o'clock this morning, in the presence of an immense throng. People were camped along the river bank all night awaiting the event. No mountain desperado has killed more men in Kentucky than "Bad" Tom Smith, He murdered Joe Hurt in 1883, the Combs brothers and Eversole in 1888, Ambrose Amburg, Robin Connett, Jacob McKnight and Ed Campbell in 1889. In September, he resisted arrest in Jackson, where to-day he paid the life penalty. Town Marshal H. C. Hurst, jr., and deputy Manns attempted to arrest Smith and a number of his cohorts, and a fight followed, in which Smith was shot in the left arm, breaking smith was shot in the left arm, breaking the bone and severing an artery, from which he came near bleeding to death. He Doesn't Think the State Committee Will Listen to the Cry of the Free Coinage Radicals.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal MARMONT, Ind., June 28 .- The Democratic Editorial Association was called to order, at 9 o'clock, in the large sitting room of Lakeview Hotel by President Boyd, of the Washington Democrat. He read a telegram from Thomas Taggart, speaking for the Marion County Board of Tax Review, sending greeting and personally regretting that he could not be present.

The committee on credentials reported fifty-five editors present. Of these Mr. Wellman, chairman of the executive committee, said that twenty-three were for no action indorsing independent free coinage and twenty-two for such action. He called the contest a drawn battle.

The first work of the convention was to hear a letter read from J. G. Shanklin, of the Evansville Courier. The twenty-two silverite editors liberally applauded the letter.

A lengthy address by J. P. Dunn, of the Indianapolis Sentinel, was next heard. Mr. Dunn was heard with most respectful, even profound, attention, and made some telling hits in favor of a stable currency. The anti-silver editors showed their appreciation of Mr. Dunn's researchful discussion by tremendous applause, in which the other side generously joined, for the J. B. Stoll, of South Bend, then read a curred, and the resolutions were adopted amid loud clapping of hands. Adjournment speedily followed. There were afterward mutual congratulations on the successful dodging.

Andrew Monaghan, a Fort Wayne editor, was angry. He charged G. W. Shanklin with being in complicity with the men who had thwarted the sentiment of 16 to 1, made conspicuous by buttons and badges worn on the coat lapels of several members. He said that Mr. Shanklin had printed an editorial saying that the silver idea was not yet ready for party promulgation, and yet he, in the face of this, had sent a letter Rader was killed one night by Smith. He was captured and tried. Smith tried to charge the murder of Dr. Rader to Mrs. McQuinn, his paramour, but the court found him guilty. He was jealous of not be again. The Fort Wayne man talked with much emphasis. The association, however, closed the session with the har-mony which Mr. Bell, before reading the resolutions, said he spelled with a big H. It was only attended eight or ten, who would say but little of what was done. A committee, consisting of A. W. Clark, of Greensburg, W. L. Slink-ard, of Bloomfield, and Josiah Gwin, of New Albany, was appointed to confer with Senator Turple, with a view to holding a State convention of Democratic believers in free silver. The Russians who came back from the Chicago exposition, many of whom I saw, were full of wonder at the enterprise and progress of the country. They never tire of talking about it. Nothing has ever been seen like the progress of this Nation since the world NEW LONDON, Conn., June 28 .- The oarsmen of Yale to-day defeated the men of Harvard for the thirteenth time since the annual contests were inaugurated between the colleges at Springfield on June 30, 1876. The race was rowed under favorable conditions and was a fair test of merits, in which Harvard was beaten by 35 seconds, or nearly ten lengths. The distance was four miles on the Thames river, down stream, from a point below Gale's Ferry and extending to the big railroad bridge at New London. The official time was: Yale, 21:30; Harvard, 22:05.

The pharse, "Yale has won," has become such a monotony in college athletics that it is hardly possible that to-day's result will startle anybody. Amid acres of masts and spars, forests of fluttering flags and labyrinths of scurrying crafts of all kinds, Yale's brawny young giants pulled their shell over the finishing line with an easy-Harvard could not, under any circumstances, beat them out. About the gray old bridge that spans the river Thames at the finish line of the long 'varsity course there was a floating city, a carnival of colored stream that would rival Tintoretto. Though all day rain-filled clouds had threatened to mar the enjoyment of the spectators, yet so far did the blue predominate that even the heavy clouds broke away soon after noon to let a gleam of blue sky peer through as an omen as to the result of the day's sport. From early in the afternoon the river was a moving mass of color, changing in kaleidoscopic form about the narrow marine lane left for the college crews to struggle in for supremacy. When the sun came out about an hour before the race was called it turned the dark gray water into a pale blue, on which you might catch gleams of the great reversed groups of gaudy flags and bunting, mirrored on the dancing waves. The hillsides and the bridge were masses of moving brilliant bits of blue and crimson; pretty girls were everywhere, decked in the color of their favorite college, and they frescoed the boats and the hillsides, streaming in groups of color and trying to be heard above the tooting and Harvard started with a quicker stroke, but the Yale boat soon forged ahead, rowing about forty strokes a minute, while Harvard was doing forty-one, Jennings, who was substituted for Hollister in the Harvard crew, rowed remarkably well and the critics who watched his work from the referee's and press boats were loud in praise of his rowing. The the river, rowed evenly and their shell shot through the water very smoothly, while Harvard's craft sagged between strokes. It was quickly seen that No. 4, in the latter's boat, was doing very poor work. He turned on the catch before the rest of the crew. When the half mile mark was reached the Yale boys had a lead of two lengths and they slowed down to a stroke of thirty-five, but the wearers of the crimson still kept their stroke above forty. The water was smooth and the conditions were everything that could be desired for a good race. The body work of the sons of Ell was excellent, while that of the Harvard crew became worse and No. 4 was splashing badly when the first mile was ended.

YALE ROWED LIKE A MACHINE. At the mile Yale had increased her lead to three lengths and the men were rowing like a machine. When they passed the one and one-half mile mark they had not gained any more on their adversaries. The wind changed slightly to the south, which made the water a little rough. Both crews splashed a good deal over the one and a half mile line, but the Yale men soon recovered an even strake of thirtya card rate of 11-10 cents, the increase to | to cut down the three lengths' lead at the two mile mark. The Yale boat was steered by Coxswain Clark as straight as an arrow, but the Harvard coxswain seemed to lose control of his boat. At the two and a half mile flag the boat's course changed and it made a big turn, losing fully a length before being straightened out. At this point it was plainly seen that, barring accidents, Yale would win in easy fashion, as she increased her lead constantly, though gradually. The body swing of the crew continued regular and steady. The Harvard men seemed to swing out of the boat. The cheers and tocting of whistles now began in earnest and the Yale cry was heard from both sides of the river. Harvard's stroke was increased to forty-one,
